

Foreword

The presented volume is devoted to current issues in the widely-understood area of document examination.

The articles are concerned with subjects combining forensic science, law of evidence and other disciplines of science, and especially handwriting examination and its implementation in practice. Another distinct group of articles discusses the latest achievements in analysis of questioned documents, examination of security measures applied on documents and examination of historical documents.

The specific nature of examination of documents and its interdisciplinary character call for international co-operation and discussion, which is reflected in this volume by interesting studies elaborated by experts on the theory and — first and foremost — practice of document examination.

This volume constitutes a valuable source of knowledge of the document and contemporary developments in its examination.
